Topic: Looking beyond the compulsion of “Need to be told”: An Attempt at Anthrognocicity in the Undergraduate Literature Classroom

This talk examines the scope of anthrology in a tertiary level English literature classroom in a rural setting, where learners come with a minimum knowledge of the English language and literature. Such learners, when provided with adequate ‘interpretative space’, use strategies of their own to learn in their own ways, which perhaps would not have happened if the teacher had answered to the burden of the ‘need to be told’.

This will be followed by a panel discussion:

Title: Anthrognocicity: Taking it further.
